Beautiful Trees and Scenery in Palomar State Park

Mountain Sees Activity Of Untold Value

County officials, including supervisors and road men; Engineer Wallace of the State Highway dept.; State Park Supervisor Fleming of the southern district; Capt. C. S. McDowell, U. S. N., supervising engineer of construction at the telescope site on Palomar mountain; Frank Forward of the Union Title Co. as well as a number of other dignitaries and a representative of The Ocean Beach News met by appointment on the easterly slope of Palomar mountain last Friday; the officials to settle a number of points in regard to road construction of the highway going thru various sections where the different parties had jurisdiction.

Mount Palomar has been a place of activity for nearly a year now since the California Institute of Technology decided definitely on the place as a location for the 200-inch telescope, largest in the world. Large pieces of machinery as well as long and heavy pieces of steel must be hauled up the mountain to the 6300 foot level, the site of the telescope. The sharp turns in the road must be widened, and other improvement made to allow for transportation of all this equipment.

The county recently finished a three-mile stretch thru new territory which will be connected by a stretch of the same length now being constructed. By 225 men and their overseers, working for the Cal-Tech.

At the site five commodious cottages have recently been finished for the engineer of the power plant, the superintendent of the works, and other men who expect to be located here permanently. Excavation has just begun for foundation cores for the telescope; these being placed in irregular formation and will be at different depths in order to take care of different weights to be built over them. The walls of the telescope building will be approximately 10 feet high and circular so that the telescope equipment may be moved around the circle at will of the operators to view the heavens. The diameter of this building will be 135 feet.

There is now practically completed a new type telescope and building which is to be ready for operation July 1st of 1936. This building is so circular, 20 feet in diameter, and the telescope itself is only 18 inches across, this instrument is of the reflector-refractor type, and it is said to be the largest in the world of its kind.

Heavy steel frame-work is in place, the permanent machine shop and electric plant with a small temporary unit now supplying electricity, etc.

A 50,000 gallon water-pressure tank is in place on its tower as well

Celebrate 50th Wedding Anniversary June 24

A happy occasion, Wednesday, June 24th, was the celebration of their golden wedding anniversary by Mr. and Mrs. John Clarke, 4761 Niagara avenue, residents here since 1915.

Mr. and Mrs. Clarke were married at Brainerd, Minn., June 24, 1886, living there seventeen years, then coming west and south to Albuquerque, New Mexico, where they made there home until coming to this section in 1915.

A wedding dinner in observance of the occasion was served to the honor guests and members of the family Wednesday evening. Many beautiful cards and a number of gifts were received by the Clarks, all appropriate to the anniversary.

To make the day complete in its happiness the following family members gathered to wish the honored guests every happiness in the years to come: Mrs. George Clifford of Los Angeles and Mrs. Russell Howe of Warners; George Clark of San Diego and Walter and Lloyd Clark of Vallejo; also the families of George and Walter Clarke.

The News joins the many friends of Mr. and Mrs. Clarke at the beach, in wishing them continued happiness, and other good things life has to offer.

as an immense storage reservoir on the ground level.

The large 200-inch telescope with its equipment is expected to be in readiness in about three years, some time during 1939.

Capt. McDowell, at present in charge of all construction to and including the telescope site, gave the party much valuable information and was a most congenial officer to meet.

With world interest now centered at Palomar for scientific study of the heavens, the supervisors of the county are lending every assistance possible to further the project and assist in making better roads that visitors will come by the thousands to the scenic mountain country instead of by the dozens. Palomar is indeed a beautiful mountain section with many levels for development from 4,000 to 6,000 feet above sea level. The tree and natural beauty of Palomar State park is indeed worth one's time to visit and enjoy, bringing to those visitors the foresight of the men who have made it possible for the ordinary citizen to motor in the mountain coolness of dry and enervating air, to relax and to recuperate from his daily tasks.

With the cutting down of steep grades and sharp turns of the east road and the completion of the west road now being constructed with prison labor we feel sure that the travel to Palomar and the telescope observatory will be worth many, many times what it is at present.

New Fleet Reserve Body Organized at Beach

Monday evening, June 22, at the American Legion hall on Abbott street, the Ocean Beach Branch No. 80 of the Fleet Reserve association was organized.

Hugh Reynolds acting upon authority from national headquarters in Washington, D. C., called the meeting to order and appointed Logan E. Ruggles, past national president of the association, as temporary chairman for organization.

Ruggles upon assuming the gavel called upon regional vice president Cordes of the national organization, from Los Angeles, who gave a brief concise and interesting talk upon the aims, objects and activities of the Fleet Reserve association. Cordes was followed by Carl S. Tappe, president of branch No. 9 of San Diego who pledged the cooperation and support of branch 9 toward making the new Ocean Beach branch a success. George N. Speer was appointed as temporary secretary-treasurer and following Tappe's talk Ruggles called for new members to hit the deck for muster. The following responded: Jas. Lynes, L. E. Ruggles, Chas. A. Padgett, Geo. N. Speer, Hugh Reynolds, L. T. White-side, H. R. Clark, P. E. Wogan, J. McGorrian, P. S. Decker, M. Q. Wright, N. S. Brockie, R. J. Guion, Elmer E. Steele, E. F. Ray, J. H. McLaughlen, H. E. Hockenberry, Geo. F. Kelley, R. G. Hollen, Neil A. McLeod, A. W. Ostrom, C. L. Lewis, H. Jones, Isaac Riddle and H. P. Snyder, or a total of twenty-six new members, in that but fifteen members are required for a charter, the new charter was more than assured.

The Fleet Reserve association is composed of members of the U. S. Navy and Marine Corps who have more than eight years active service men who are out on sixteen, twenty year reserve or upon full thirty year retirement. There are no initiation fees and the annual dues are six dollars a year. In addition to the above named men some fifteen more eligible residents of Ocean Beach have declared their intentions of joining the new branch but were unable to attend the organization meeting. The new charter will be received within a very few days and all residents of Ocean Beach who are eligible are requested to contact either Hugh Reynolds, 4712 Coronado avenue, BV-4119, or Geo. N. Speer, 4761 Del Monte avenue, BV-3014 who will be glad to give them any information desired.

Temporary officers elected at Monday nights meeting were: Hugh Reynolds, president, C. L. Lewis, vice president; Geo. N. Speer, Secretary; L. E. Ruggles, E. E. Steele, J. H. McLaughlen, Geo. F. Kelley and P. S. Decker as board of directors. In that Ocean Beach has be-

TALK UPON PROGRESS OF TRANSPORTATION

Griff Lloyd was chairman for the day at Kiwanis luncheon Wednesday with his speaker Tom Bomar of the San Diego chamber of commerce.

Mr. Bomar told an interesting story of the history of transportation, taking his audience back to the days of overland stage and the pony express, then by stages the development of rail, steam and air transportation. He said the stages between San Antonio, Texas, and San Diego were given 25 days to make the trip, with $200 the charge per passenger and baggage held down to 25 lbs. as the maximum. Now the trip is made in 14 to 15 hours by airplane with the charge $98, and more baggage can be carried without charge, than on the overland stage.

The speaker told us to have faith in the future, give the experimenters in explosive rockets and other novel ventures a chance that they might try out their ideas, none of which sound more fantastic than did the airplane to the citizen of one hundred years ago. He said Jules Verne's story of "Around the World in 80 Days" was only a fairy tale for many years, but it is quite a time now since Wiley Post circled the globe in only eight days.

Rev. W. S. Dunn, former Kiwanian was a visitor.

I. W. Parks, past president, was in charge.

LET'S HAVE CITY GRADER CLEAN UP CURBINGS

A suggestion from Wayne Hill, Newport avenue resident, is that the city grader be used to clean up curbing on the streets where there are none or very few trees.

He reports this method is being used with success on Santa Barbara avenue in Ocean Beach, and where there is no shrubbery in the curb space, we see no good reason why the use of the grader cannot be extended to more settled and more traveled avenues of the beach.

Franklin Delano Roosevelt

Sure of Nomination at Democratic Convention

The Democratic convention now being held at Philadelphia is holding the attention of the nation at the present time and President Roosevelt without doubt will be the nominee to again lead his party.

The platform supporting new deal policies is in the making and will continue along lines already established by the Roosevelt administration. The Republican controlled press of the large cities has nothing but derision for these policies and its defenders, yet we cannot but see that there has been real progress since President Roosevelt took office in 1933 and believe the President has endeavored to faithfully comply with the spirit of the Chicago convention.

"Happy Days Are Here Again" is the theme song of the gathering and we do not have to look around twice to tell that this is much truer now than it was during any day of the last Hoover administration.

Exciting Rodeo Sunday Promised at Expo

Champion rodeo riders of the west began today to converge on San Diego and the Exposition for the tenth annual Lakeside Rodeo celebration, June 26, 27 and 28.

The frontier days performance have been officially sanctioned by the Rodeo Association of America, and the performers will strive for points toward the title of World's Champion Cowboy.

Clay Carr, world champion cowboy in 1930 and again in 1933, whose specialties are bronc riding and steer roping, has competed in several of the Lakeside jousts and will be on hand at the Exposition.

Nearly 30 of the nation's champions, listed since 1929 in the nine divisions of competition, which includes bucking, calf roping, steer wrestling, team roping, bull riding, wild cow milking, relay racing for men and women and bareback riding, are expected to compete on the three day program.

While the champs are busy preparing for the competition, Lakeside officials undertook their task, too, of bringing the "toughest stock in the west" to the fair. Shipments of Texas Longhorns, Mexican steers, the famous Brahmas and the black polled Angus, with hides as sleek as glass, already have arrived at the Lakeside ranch near El Cajon. Other shipments are following.

Purses totalling more than $2000 will be distributed among the contestants at the Exposition rodeo, divided among the nine divisions in which points are given.

The rodeo week-end also will feature American Legion Days, on the 27th and 28th of June, when Legionnaires throughout Southern California will come to the world's fair.

The Legion program includes a Saturday and Sunday of celebration, climaxed Saturday night by an illuminated parade staged by the 40-8 group and a daylight procession with bands, drum and bugle corps, drill teams and auxiliary units on Sunday.

Bank Index Continues To Show Business Gain

Bank of America's index of western business for May stood at 72.2, a gain of 13.7 per cent over May of 1935, according to the June issue of the bank's business review.

The May 1936 index was 32 per cent above the depression low of March 1933. The figure declined 1.1 points from April 1936, which compares with a decline of 2.6 points from April to May of 1935.

California's manufacturing industries gained 6 per cent in employment and 15 per cent in payrolls during May of this year over the corresponding month of 1935, while average weekly earnings of employees showed an increase of 8.5 per cent.

The state's bank debits in May increased 10.9 per cent over May of 1935, and for the first five months of this year gained 21.8 per cent.

Building and construction in California continued the upward trend of the year with a 78 per cent gain in May over May, 1935. For the first five months of the year building has increased 52.6 per cent over the like period last year and 203 per cent over the first five months of 1934.

May carloadings increased 3.1 per cent over April, and 11.5 per cent over May of 1935. For the first five months of this year, carloadings have shown a gain of 14.9 per cent over the corresponding five months of 1935.

Indicating California's betterment in purchasing power, retail sales of the state in May increased 5.8 per cent over May, 1935, and the record of the first five months of this year was 10.2 per cent ahead of the five months ended May 31, 1935.

The Trolling Frog Tragedy

BECAUSE he's so desperately fond of frog's legs, Albert Mackey of Detroit once owned the biggest bull frog that ever croaked a love song.

Albert landed the Goliath near Grass Lake Mich., and it measured 28 1/2 inches and weighed precisely three pounds, four ounces.

Albert kept the giant alive simply because it spurred his appetite just to look at his pet. He named it Frenchy.

When Albert owned Frenchy 28 days to the hour he permitted the frog a daily swim in the lake. When he gave a certain peculiar whistle, here the frog would come, plowing the water like a destroyer.

An adventurously hungry fish followed Frenchy home from his swim one day, nipping at his aft propellers and spurring Al's pet leviathan to strenuous efforts. That gave Al an idea and it wasn't long until a little harness was fitted on the frog's body. Then Al attached two short lengths of fishing line and a couple of good-sized hooks with spinners and sent Frenchy out trolling.

The very first trial, a two-pound bass struck. Al whistled and Frenchy, churning the water desperately, beached his prize. It was easy then. Frenchy learned to troll the most likely places, edges of weed beds, around lily pads and windfalls—he'd even dive into deep holes where bass lurked.

Course, nothing's permanent. Unknown to all, a fierce muskellunge inhabited Grass Lake. Al had sent Frenchy foraging when he saw the muskie dive at the frog, gulp mightily and vanish with him, not to reappear.

"I'd a-whistled him home," said Albert sadly. "But we'd put some persimmons on ice and I was testing them. Darn it all, my lips puckered on me."

And it's well known in Detroit that out of respect for his frog, Albert Mackey hasn't eaten another persimmon since that dreadful day.

Saved by a Sonnet

"GRANDPAP MORGAN was a frontier publisher in Texas, but he had his most thrilling adventure before he ever reached the Lone Star state," says Frank Morgan, printer and proofreader in many a shop throughout the Middle West. This is his story of that adventure:

The wagon train which Grandpap Morgan had joined with his old Army press, his cases of type and other equipment, got safely through the Indian country until it came to the crossing of the Cimarron river. There a big war party jumped them.

For more than three hours the emigrants kept the Redskins at bay. Then a whisper of fear ran among the defenders. . . their bullets were almost exhausted! As their fire slackened and died down, the savages began massing for a final charge.

Just as the emigrants were getting ready to throw down their useless rifles and draw their Bowie knives, Grandpap Morgan shouted: "Wait! Wait! . . . Quick, one of you fellows . . . help me get the type locked up in this form . . . it's all ready to print when I get to Texas, but it won't get printed anyway if the Indians kill me now. Here, men, fill your guns!"

As they rammed home the pieces of lead type, a ringing war-whoop and the drumming of swift pony hoofs on the hard prairie told of the savage charge that was coming.

"Now!" shouted Grandpap Morgan. A blast of fire from fifty rifles, and the racing ponies were jerked to a halt. A moment later the Redskins, screeching with rage, were racing away in mad retreat over the hills.

Grandpap Morgan grinned. "I knew that would turn the trick," he said. "A column and a half of spring poetry . . . they just couldn't stand it!"

Ever Meet a High-Behind?

MANY a tenderfoot has protected the camp from a high-behind, but not one of them has seen this fabulous beast.

The high-behind, as all Westerners know, is equipped with a stiff tail, the end of which was fashioned like a posthole digger.

The chief delight of the high-behind was to turn on its back, balance on the tail and spin madly in circles. Of course you understand the rotary action of this indulgence bored a hole in the ground into which the high-behind invariably disappeared.

Night duties of a tenderfoot frequently included replenishment of condensed milk cans around the camp. This was the favorite food of the high-behind. The beast opened the cans with his metal tail and after three drinks was lulled into such abiding peace that the camp was safe for the night from his attacks.

Forest Air Pure

Forest air is pure because the leaves of the trees act as a filter, catching most of the dust and bacteria that would otherwise pollute it. Moreover, a forest has a definite hygienic influence on the land around it, a fact that has been confirmed by a number of villages in India which have never been attacked during cholera epidemics in their district due to their being surrounded by dense, protecting woods.

BOBBY COON AND BILLY MINK PUT THEIR HEADS TOGETHER

WHEN Billy Mink cried "Stop!" Bobby Coon stopped. He stopped with one paw lifted and just ready to put down in the middle of the little opening in that fence which had so puzzled him. He turned his head to look back at Billy Mink. "Why should I stop?" he demanded, and he spoke rather crossly.

"Because if you take one more step forward, it will be the last step you ever will take," snapped Billy.

Bobby didn't take that forward step. Instead he backed away in such a and no one could get through that little opening without stepping in that trap. There's another one set just the same way on the other side of the Laughing Brook.

Bobby Coon looked across and for the first time saw the other little fence. Bobby's face became very sober. "We ought to do something about those traps," said he. "We are the only ones who know anything about them and we can't sit here all the time to warn others who may be traveling up and down the Laughing Brook. I wouldn't want my worst enemy to be caught in one of those dreadful traps. What can we do to warn others?"

"I don't know," replied Billy Mink. "I guess we'll have to put our heads together and think up something. You know, two heads are better than one."

hurry that it really was funny. You would have thought he had burned his toes. Then he turned around to face Billy Mink. "What sort of nonsense is this?" he growled. "I don't see anything wrong."

Billy grinned. "You may not see anything wrong," said he, "but if you had put your foot down in that little opening you would have felt something wrong. Yes, indeed, you would have felt something wrong. You certainly would. There is a trap hidden there. I suspect it was set for me, but I guess the trapper who set it would almost as soon catch you as me."

Bobby Coon blinked and looked very hard at Billy Mink to see if he were fooling. When he saw the angry red in Billy's eyes he knew that Billy wasn't fooling. "Goodness, that was a narrow escape!" exclaimed Bobby. "I'm ever so much obliged to you, Billy Mink. I hope that some day I can do something for you. If you hadn't happened along tonight I guess I would be in a terrible fix right now. Do you suppose that trapper built that little fence?"

"Of course," retorted Billy Mink. "He built it so that the only way of going up or down the Laughing Brook without taking a lot of trouble would be to go through that little opening."

DOUBLING MONEY

IN THIS trick, the magician begins by taking up a collection. He asks persons to place coins on a small tray, counting the money as they place it there.

After several coins have been collected, the magician lets them slide into the hands of another spectator, who is then asked to count the coins, replacing them on the tray, one by one.

To his amazement, the holder of the coins discovers that he has twice as many coins as he thought. The magician appropriates the coins that came from nowhere.

The extra coins are actually the magician's. He holds them beneath the tray, with his fingers, while he collects money from the audience. In sliding the visible coins from the tray, he lets the hidden coins slide from beneath. All go into the hands of the spectator.

LIFE ENDED AT FORTY

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

I SAW a fellow with a beard today. The first such fellow I had seen since 'way Back longer than I can remember now. Not since Ben Harrison lived, anyhow. Bill Bryan he was slow arriving at The place he started for, but did do that:

Set men a fashion, set the country free From long gray whiskers like they used to be.

Why, I remember when I was a lad The solemn habits that our fathers had:

When they got forty, then their days were through,

All there was left for any man to do Was get religion, sit around the store, And raise long whiskers, and the times deplore.

Their dress grew sombre as their fifties neared, A woman mostly black, man mostly bearded.

To be granddad was to be all done, Or often even have a married son. A man of forty let his whiskers grow For fear that other people wouldn't know.

A man without them couldn't hope to win

A public office, looking full of sin. The Bible pictures, all authorities, Agreed on whiskers for old chaps like these.

"Life ends at forty," was the motto then, Divided elders from the younger men. Now, if a mustache, even that we doff, At forty tell the barber, "Shave it off." Man's life has lengthened ten or twenty years, And all because the whisker disappeared.

No man of forty needs sit back and hush—

For he has quit his hiding in the brush.

There are Mr. Harriden, Miss Letty Van Alstyne, Mrs. Crane, Mrs. Watkins and Prince and Princess Rancini, guests. Lella finds she is taking the place of Nora Harriden. Dan Harriden leaves the table, and Mitchell explains he has gone up to see how his wife's headache is. He returns shortly, Deck, saying he must put in a call, leaves. Upon his return, he begs Lella to secretly take a message to Nora "to take no steps until I see you." Lella consents. Lella finds the Harriden rooms empty and so informs Deck. Coming out she passes Letty. Harriden asks Princess Rancini to run up and see his wife. The princess reports the absence of Nora. Search is fruitless. Harriden admits that he had a row, and believes she is spitefully hiding. Letty tells of seeing Lella come from the room. Lella accuses Harriden of having struck his wife. This Harriden denies. From the Harridens' window Lella sees what proves to be Nora's lifeless body. A ghastly head wound caused death. Dan says she was lying on her bed when he went to dinner, and when he ran up later the room was dark. Thinking she was asleep, he left without seeing her. Mrs. Keller comes upon a pool of blood in the closet. A diamond chain is missing. Donahay, police inspector, questions the guests. Harriden fails to report the row he had with Nora. He brands Lella's story of seeing a man strike a woman a lie. Anson, a maid, tells of seeing Deck outside the Harriden door. Deck says he passed by in seeking a lost handkerchief.

"I don't know what time I came up but I was loafing downstairs till I had to hustle to dress," Mitchell reported, and Keller stated that he had gone up before the time in question and had been talking through the open doors with his wife.

Donahay turned toward Alan Deck. "You, Mr. Deck?"

Deck answered, "I went up fairly early to my room—though I haven't any wife to vouch for it." His tone was lightly mocking. "After I changed I went to the picture gallery on the third floor—by the south stairs," he mentioned. "My presence there Miss Seton can certify to. We encountered each other there."

The inspector's gaze moved back to me. "Appointment?"

"Accident," I told him. "We had never met each other before."

"What were you doing there?"

I reminded him that the pictures were my business in the house. Alan Deck said merely, "Time on my hands—things to think out. Like a big place to tramp about in."

Donahay made more of his little notes. Then, as usual, he asked for the exact time of this encounter and listened wearily to our uncertainties that finally decided it had been a little before eight. "That's when I lost my handkerchief," said Deck.

"Now let me get this straight," said Donahay. "Your rooms are in the south wing, second floor. Before dinner you went up to the gallery on the second floor, using the stairs on your side of the house. You met Miss Seton there, accidentally. You lost your handkerchief. During dinner you went up to call your paper, then you remembered that you had lost your handkerchief, probably in the gallery, and you started out to find it. You went along the hall that goes across the length of the house, passing the door of Mrs. Harriden's room."

"Among others," interpolated Deck. "Was that when the maid saw you?"

Deck reflected. "No—when I was coming back from the gallery. She was coming from the south, along the hall toward me."

"O.K. The maid saw you and thought you might have been coming out of the room. That's it, isn't it?"

"That's it," said Deck in his nonchalant voice. "I might just have stopped, wondering if it was worth while to try that call again. I didn't get it, the first time."

Donahay finished his notes without comment, then concentrated again upon me.

"Now then—about this thing at the window now—"

"Can't you forget that?" Harriden demanded. "Why do you want to waste your time—"

"Now, now, Mr. Harriden, it may lead to something. It may have been some outside fellow, somebody who came here to see her on the Q.T. He—"

Harriden made a surge forward and I thought the veins on his congested face would burst. He looked almost at the limit of his self-control.

"Are you suggesting that my wife had a clandestine visitor—"

"Not the way you think at all," the official returned with his unmoved detachment. "She might have owed him money, gambling or something, or he might have been blackmailing her. Funny things like that happen. He may have forced his way in, and she didn't want to give him away. She may have hid him in the closet and faked a headache so they could talk while you folks were eating. And then he made a grab at her shiners and they got to struggling, and he stabbed her."

Harriden cursed him for a fool. "Do you think my wife was ever afraid of a blackmailer?" he thundered. "Can't you see this girl is just making this up to get herself some sensational limelight—"

"Well, now, she hasn't any reason for making it up, has she?"

Harriden gave me a sudden, strange look.

"How do I know?" he said wearily. "I don't know a damned thing about her except that she's lying. She cooked up this story to cover up her going into my wife's room."

"Don't you think, Mr. Donahay," came Mrs. Crane's practical voice from somewhere behind us, "that this investigation has gone far enough to-night? It is well on into the morning."

Donahay conceded, "Something in it, lady. There's guards around the place and guards inside the house and nobody is to stir out till we get through with this."

We had risen to go out when one of the policemen came in, bringing a young man in the livery of an under-butler.

CHAPTER V

He was rather a reedy looking young man, with a cadaverous face, prominent cheek-bones and deep-set eyes. He looked excited, and the policeman with him was excited, as he boomed along to the inspector. Donahay took the affairs into his hands.

"My man says you've admitted knowing something. Now, what's your name?"

"Elkins," said the man in a strained, nervous voice.

"You work here?"

"Yes, sir, for three years. And I mean no disrespect to my employers in speaking out about a guest. I understand it's my duty to tell anything that I might know."

"That's your duty," said Donahay grimly. "What do you know?"

Elkins was breathing quickly. "People often forget that servants can hear," he said. "They talk out while we're passing things—it's embarrassing. I was just behind that Chinese screen in the lounge when they were talking. I was taking glasses off a table."

"It was the violence of what was being said that caught me," Elkins went on. "Not like the ordinary run of talk of the cocktail hour."

Donahay only nodded encouragingly. "But it was savage sounding, sir. The lady was Mrs. Harriden. She had been drinking with the gentleman, talking together for some time. And then, when I was behind the screen, I heard him say in quite a terrible voice, though very low, 'If you do, you'll be the sorriest woman on God's earth.'"

"And what did she say?"

"I didn't catch that. I got the tone of her voice—it was like she was laughing sort of sassy," said Elkins with a slip into the colloquial. "And the man said to what she said, 'I warn you.' And then he said something about lying, he said, 'I'd say you lied in your teeth,' and she said something again, that I didn't hear."

Her words were all run together like. And then he said, 'God, if you do—I warn you.' And then somebody was asking for another shaker, and I had to hurry across the room."

And when I heard she was lying dead downstairs—well, I couldn't say this had anything to do with it, but when the officer began asking me had I heard anything of their goings on and was there any bad blood about, why I'd have done less than my duty, sir, if I had covered the facts."

"Sure. You had to tell it," Donahay said evenly. "Now—about this fellow. Who was he? You haven't told us that, yet."

"There, sir. That gentleman there. Mr. Deck."

Deck stood there, and his white face, with his dark, bitter, defiant eyes, sent a queer terror through me. He was like a man in a pillory for all the world to gaze at.

And then my eyes went on, and found the figure of Harriden. He had stood there, back by the door, during that time, listening. . . . And now he looked at Deck.

Donahay's head was thrusting out on his thick neck like a turtle's.

"Well, Mr. Deck?"

His silence agitated me. And then he said, "I don't remember," and his lips twitched in a mockery of a smile.

"You don't remember?"

"Not a word. I was quite tight before dinner. . . . I haven't the faintest recollection of anything said downstairs."

Donahay ground out, "Yet you remember that you went up early to your room, you said?"

"Oh, I remember that," Deck said jauntily. "I got to my room all right," he went on, "and the cold water revived me. But everything that went on downstairs is just a total loss."

"Do you happen to remember," said the inspector with terrible sarcasm, "any reason why you could have said the words you have no recollection of saying to Mrs. Harriden?"

Deck was silent.

"What was between you?" Donahay shot out.

"Friendship," said Deck.

I know that I felt I could not bear to look at Harriden, and yet I looked at him and saw him standing, like a man of stone, his grim, blunt profile toward that younger man. The sheer beauty of Deck seemed somehow insolent and flaunting before that husband's haggard eyes. I felt a sharp cleavage of sympathy. . . . terror for Deck and anguish for that bereft man's pain.

It was the easing of a physical strain when Harriden turned and walked out of the room.

I remember a dull surprise at finding it was only half-past two when I was in my room.

I was so spent emotionally that I was conscious of nothing but a crushing depression. There was no denying the reality of Elkins' high-strung words.

And I had my own corroboration of Deck's desperate message. Take no steps.

For all my exhaustion I could not sleep; my thoughts kept milling about in confused conjecturing. Had Deck been the man at the window—had he followed her up to finish the quarrel there?

It might have been Deck, I thought. He might have slipped away when he heard Harriden come in the next room—she might have promised to meet him as soon as possible in the gallery. Then she did not come. Perhaps her husband had stayed too long in the room.

What was their quarrel about, I wondered, my temples throbbing heavily against the pillow. Was she threatening to leave him—was he mad with jealousy? The sorriest woman on God's earth. . . . Had he gone up from dinner to carry out his wild threat?

Oh, no, no, no! Only to see her, to plead with her. For he had sent me up later to try to get word to her, to urge her to take no steps. . . .

Oh, fool that I had been not to speak out before! Then my story might have carried conviction, but now it would seem a lame invention of mine to save him.

Or had his sending me on that errand been merely a ruse on his part, to make it appear that he still believed her in her room, when all the time he knew that room was untenanted and her poor body shrouded in the shrubbery below?

I did not know what to believe. My mind went round and round in the mazes of its doubt. . . . He had been so long away from that table. . . . But that had been because he was trying to reach her, my defensive heart instantly declared. He had told me that her room phone did not answer—of course, he had gone to her door and knocked—perhaps even tried it.

I wondered if he had peeped in and found darkness and ghostly curtains blowing in the wind. Or if he had found the door locked—locked by an unknown assassin who was still inside.

I determined to try to make Deck confide in me. Since I already knew so much, since I had proved stanch, surely he would tell me the truth. . . . But if his sending me had been a ruse—? My mind wandered from all this wondering. At last I slept.

I woke very suddenly. I woke to the instant impression that some one was in my room. I lay there with my eyes shut, not daring to open them, trying to feign sleep, feeling in every nerve that something was there—something just within the door. There had been some sound, some indefinable sound that had waked me.

Every instant the feeling grew more terrible; I knew then that fear could be paralyzing, for I lay there literally unable to move or speak, simply helpless and terrified, waiting for something horrible to happen.

Then there was a creak at the door and soft, muffled steps down the hall. I knew I was not imagining those steps; I heard them, though my own thumping heart beats sounded louder to me. I suppose it was only a moment or two, really, that I lay in the grip of that helplessness, then motion and sense came back to me, and I reached out and managed to flash on the night light with fingers that fumbled frantically for the tiny chain as if each instant of darkness was a danger. Then I jumped up and ran for the door.

I forced myself to look out down the blackness of that hall. I saw nothing. I heard nothing. I did not go out and look down the stairs; I dodged back and shut and locked my door.

Should I call some one on the house phone? I moved toward it but hesitated, caught back by the fear of something hysterical and panicky. It was easy for overwrought nerves to play tricks and in my half-asleep condition I might have imagined those sounds within my door. The steps, though, had been real. But the steps could easily be accounted for. Donahay had said the house was guarded and very likely one of the policemen was patrolling the hall and, finding my door ajar, had paused to make sure my room was occupied.

I persuaded myself that this was so. What else could it be? Confidence had revived with the lighted room and I told myself the rustling had been only the night wind playing with the folds of my satin frock left lying on the chair by the door. My very excess of past terror and my ashamed reaction against it swept me now too far in the other direction, for I did not phone.

It was not easy to get to sleep again but I did, ultimately. And it was bright day when I waked, with the sun streaming across the dark, polished floor, over the white fur rug, to glow on the rose-red of the deep-cushioned chair. But no sun could lift the depression of that past night or banish the pictures moving before my eyes—Nora Harriden's limp, gold-clad body in her husband's arms. . . . that husband's face, rigid, grief-smitten. . . . Deck's defiant, high-held head and his bitter, tormented eyes.

I must get to Deck, I thought excitedly, and hurried into a cold shower, wondering what was done about breakfast in that house. I phoned the question and was informed that breakfast would be up.

Coffee was my chief need, black and hot, and I welcomed it all the more since the maid who brought the tray told me that the inspector would like to see me as soon possible. I took a last look at myself in the glass, then went downstairs.

The halls were empty; so, too, was the big entrance hall, except for a policeman at the front door. In the drawing-room Donahay was behind his usual table. He nodded in response to my good morning, then jerked his head toward a couple of young men at a table at the far end of the room and sent me to have my fingerprints taken.

That was to be expected, I thought, and certainly I had nothing to worry about, except that I was rather interested in the process of print taking, for I knew something about the work, so I fell into chat with the two young men. It was just a formality, they said; there was nothing to be gained from all this print taking unless they got the print of some insider, for all the household had been over the room.

"Except Deck," said a heavy voice beside us.

I started, and found Harriden staring down at us out of red-rimmed eyes. The man's face looked as if years instead of hours had passed; the deep lines in it were accentuated till they seemed like seams, and the flesh was sparer and tighter over the hard-angled bones.

"Deck wasn't in the room after the murder—and don't you forget that," he admonished grimly.

I was impatient to see Deck. I thought of phoning to his room, then I remembered that a policeman might be listening in—I thought of getting in touch with Monty Mitchell and trusting him with a message. But Donahay detained me then with more questions, and I had to go over what I had said before and tell him more about myself and how I happened to be there at all. At the end he told me I must appear at the inquest on Sunday morning.

I went out in the hall and wandered about a little irresolutely, thinking that if I kept out in sight I might encounter either Alan Deck or Monty Mitchell without having to phone and betray my eagerness to the officials. As a pretext for lingering I read the papers over and over.

The headlines were sensational—Society Beauty Murdered—and the first pages were filled with stories of Nora's life, and there was one account of the famous yellow diamond chain. The pendant on it, it was stated, was a flawless jewel which had been worn on the turbans of a royal Turkish family, for generations; the last heir had given it to Mrs. Harriden instantly upon her expression of admiration—a costly gesture which her husband had paid for, later, by persistent losses at cards. The chain, so the paper said, had been assembled by Mr. Harriden to match the pendant.

My eyes raced through the accounts of the guests; there was no reference to Alan Deck except as "a favorite in the Long Island set." No reporter, I was sure, had been able to get in the house; the papers had had to take the facts that Donahay had given out, and the list of guests and do what they could with their imagination.

After the inquest, I supposed, Deck's threats could no longer be kept secret; the papers would make what they could of that. Luckily he would have his own paper to give a favorable version. But he would have to give an explanation of his words—and I hoped fervently that the night had brought him counsel and inspiration. Restlessly I wondered where he was keeping himself.

I began to think that all of the guests were upstairs, gathered intimately in the Kellers' private sitting-room talking things over by themselves; I felt so alone in that house that it was a comfort to see the Prince Rancini coming out from the long lounge just behind this entrance hall. He looked at me with the Latin's quick interest in his big, brown eyes—a staltward, handsome fellow, with white teeth flashing in his brown face as he smiled at me. I smiled back at him, and he came up to me.

"A terrible business," he said, rolling out his r's. Very fervently I agreed.

Smart Silks for Spectator Sports

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

IF THERE is one place more than another that daytime fashions show off in a panorama of surpassing style interest, it is at the races. The influence of the French races and Ascot was very evident at the openings of our own American tracks this season. Although there were no trailing skirts there were the reminiscent cartwheels, the tiny elaborate "doll" hats which smart Parisiennes love so well with flower, vegetable and bird trimming—millinery fantasies such as are almost amusing in their eccentricities, yet quite worthwhile in that they are adding such zest to the current mode. Silk taffeta frocks and suits were numerous and set the pace for an interesting style movement. Skirts 14 inches from the ground, any number of short-sleeved dresses and jackets with universally square shoulders were likewise interpretative of new fashion trends.

Typical of the choices of many well-dressed women was the very short black silk crepe suit with a fitted jacket that is worn with an enormous black feather-trimmed cartwheel hat. A huge white kid water lily at the shoulder gave a dramatic touch. Much is being said in fashion circles in regard to water lily colorings and water lily boutonnieres and corsages. As to suits of this type the fashion parade includes them in dark silk failles, in faconne silk taffeta, and of course, the gay printed silk suits are that ubiquitous they are taken for granted.

As to the newer silk prints there is a marked tendency to select tiny neat patterns for daytime wear. Made up in trimly tailored frocks with short sleeves and matching jackets, you have the costume-ideal for going about town and for the practical hours of general activities. Now that summer is nearing the trend toward cool silk sheers, both plain and print are obvious. To glorify these intriguing prints one must be accessory-minded to a high degree, which is not at all difficult since the shops are filled to overflowing with the most fascinating neckwear, gloves, bouquets, belts, footwear and handbags that genius might devise.

Some of the smartest women are endorsing tunics over slim skirt foundations. See the tunic model to the left in the picture. Schiaparelli's new gingham silk taffeta is the fabric chosen for this tunic. It is worn with a red leather belt over a black silk crepe skirt.

Seen at the Belmont race track was the jacket dress centered in the illustration. It is styled of dotted silk crepe, white on gray (a very important color is gray this season). Fitted jacket, square shoulders with big sleeves, and a ruffled jabot on the dress are details that interpret high swank. The bag is white calf, the hat a black straw pillbox with red and chardreuse flowers.

The contrast jacket is a pet project with fashion these days. Not to the right in the illustration the stunning model. Here a black sheer silk dress is topped by a short swagger jacket of white silk crash emblazoned with coin dots in jockey colors—maroon and blue. The hat is of white silk crash with extreme eye-shedding brim which is inspired by a jockey's cap.

WHITE LINEN SUIT

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

The linen suit in natural or pure white is an important number on the style program for summer. The accent on suits has been most pronounced all spring and now enthusiasm for suits is continuing for summer—suits of linen particularly that are cool and comfortable as temperature rises. The classic white suit here pictured is of linen of superfine grade imported from Moygashel, Ireland. It is particularly smart for town wear when accompanied with dark accessories such as fashion decrees with white. Note the navy beret, the navy-striped silk shirt, the navy gloves and bag. These identical accessories carried out in Dubonnet red are stunning.

A Fox Bracelet

Fur bracelets are next. Fox takes the lead and either bands the elbow or encircles the lower arm just above the wrist.

CIRCULAR LINES FOR NEXT AUTUMN

While most women are concentrating now on the purchase of their summer wardrobes those who are designers of fashionable clothes are concerned about next fall and winter's styles. They are considering the creations shown in recent Paris collections and thinking up ideas to produce something new in the way of silhouettes for the autumn.

The first inkling of the trend which has leaked out of the workrooms concerns the width of hemlines. Circular lines are said to be so well liked that every one of us will be wearing skirts that whirl around us like ballet costumes before many months have gone.

Camisoles and Petticoats

Should Be in Vacation Bag

Every young woman's bag packed for vacation this summer will carry its supply of dainty camisoles and rustling petticoats. The favored ones are lace-trimmed. The camisoles are made with shoulder points front and back, and are edged with lace. Many have shoulder straps made of one row of insertion banded on each side with lace. Others are made of sturdy net with Val trimming.

As for petticoats, some are the old-fashioned fine muslin with eyelet embroidery; others are of pastel taffeta, or plaid, or flowered taffeta, with rows and rows of narrow Val lace ruffles.

Swankiest Tailored Suits

Are Boasting Lace Gilets

Many of the swankiest tailored suits boast lace gilets. They are dainty and soft and provide just the right background for a beautiful clip, brooch, or treasured strand of pearls. Some of the daintiest gilets have lace fronts and collars and net backs with elastic in the waistline. Others are backless; others are really all-over lace blouses with short sleeves. Alencon, yards of val, or net are the favored materials. If you visit the smart neckwear departments or lace yardage departments, you'll want a supply of gilets to provide variety for your stand-by suit.

THE GOLDEN FLOOD

That great golden flood of new money released by the bonus payment has made this last half of June a Christmas in midsummer for retail stores of the nation. The rush of happy veterans to buy autos, clothes, radios, and furniture has reminded merchants of a genuine yuletide buying surge. But the deeper, sounder upswing of business going on right now is no mere reflection of a temporary spending spree. The high level of retail activity was amazing even thru April and May. And the brightness reaches down into basic industries, for iron and steel output is at its peak for the year of 70 percent capacity, car loadings are at their best volume, and industrial and domestic use of electric power made a new all-time record high this month.

AND SOME SIDELIGHTS

As usual after any such momentous public event as the bonus payment, accounts of curious and humorous sidelights come trickling in. For example the bonds sent out to a dead soldier, who collected. Records showed he had been killed in action in the Argonne. Actually, he was very much alive and kicking in San Jose. And then perhaps you heard about Anselmo Salcido, who cashed his odd-amount check for $19.19 but threw his $50 bond away. He thought the bonus bond was "an advertisement; it looked just like one". All of which reminds us—what has become of the Veterans of Future Wars? They've not been heard from lately, altho just the other day in San Bernardino a college youth announced he'd organized opposition to them as the Future Defenders of America. He says, "We will fight if necessary because we are not yellow."

SKYROCKETING SPUDS

As potato prices go skyrocketing, the modest, unassuming staple that we've always taken so much for granted has emerged from obscurity to take a bow in the spotlight of public interest.

Today twenty-five cents will purchase only five pounds or less of No. 1 tubers, whereas a year ago you could buy twelve pounds for that. American housewives are indignant about it, columnists are commenting about it, and husbands who once ate spuds with indifference are pausing somewhat ruefully to notice how they really taste.

But there is jubilation among potato farmers of Kern county and the delta districts of the Sacramento and San Joaquin valleys. They have good crops despite the nationwide shortage. And California's potato yield, while it's never shared the glamour attaching to our more famous products, is nevertheless worth some $10,000,000 in a good year.

Housewives complain and farmers rejoice when prices are high. It is the old paradox. But fortunately we have advanced a long way from the post war period, when dissatisfaction was rife on both sides because farmers got virtually nothing of the exorbitant prices housewives were obliged to pay.

Mass method retailing developed, and its direct-to-consumer process cut out many wasteful distributing practices that contributed to the high cost of living in those days. As we move toward greater efficiency in marketing, price fluctuations will certainly be less painful for all concerned.

Meanwhile, perhaps the once-lowly potato deserves all the attention it is now getting. True, a spud isn't beautiful, like an orange, says, or a peach or a bunch of grapes. But it's there doing heavy duty in practically every dinner you eat.

The candidate for office should dedicate his time to honest work, unselfish service and quiet courtesy. "No man who cannot master himself is worthy to rule." When Goethe uttered those words, there must have been a political campaign being carried on, for it has a sense of significance that appeals to any candidate for office. Then added to this is the true Jeffersonian spirit. You cannot "play politics"; it is a sacred obligation founded upon courageous ancestry; those who with unselfish ideals, united and set out to establish a free government. There is too much selfish gain in politics today. Men go into the political game for the business there is in it. They try to put themselves along the side of the merchant who rents a building and stocks it with merchandises. The difference in the two is that one makes it a racket while the other pursues an honest trade. There is a sacredness in honest politics that few think of; the majority vote because they have the franchise, little realizing that corrupt government is the outcome of voting wrong!

Jealousy is a word of two-fold meaning. One is founded upon hate, at poison as bad as the serpent's sting; the other is directly the opposite, based upon an admirable trait of righteous intent. The first is mental disease, envy; the second, an impulse for good stirring from the heart. The former may be described as "green with envy", a pretty, loathsome, cruel, mental disorder both demoralizing and revengefully vicious. Its results are provoking and hatefully wrong, taking spiteful advantage. There is absolutely no happiness in jealousy, but it constantly gnaws at the vitals of the soul. To conquer over this malady of envy is to gain great reward and is highly worthy of praise. Greater than conquering over ten thousand foes.

Another school year has gone into history; hundreds and thousands of studious pupils and graduates are already started on the annual vacation, and its meaning is a healthful change. As to the great army of graduates, may their vacation amply repay them for the continual and faithfulness in attendance at school, while graduation, the goal of their labors, we hope will exalt them to high positions as well as the honors gained. When the new school year returns, may every pupil be filled with new vim and anxious to take up the work in the school room. Let the goal be set higher than ever next year. Above all, let no one neglect having a good vacation, so that when the return is made, each one will feel well paid and benefitted.

SUPERVISOR WRITES MISSIO BEACH FOLKS THRU NEWS

Fellow Citizens of the 5th Supervisor District:

For nearly eighteen months have been the supervisor of your district. I have tried to cover a territory as well as possible, drive between three and four thousand miles each month. My district is very large one, comprising approximately 3,000 square miles, extending from Borego Valley to Miss-sion Beach, and from the Orange Riverside county lines to the San Diego river. In my ramblings of my district I have often been asked why I didn't get around more frequently.

I am sure my constituents read that with a district as large as 5th, it is impossible for me to attend to my official duties at the co-house and also cover an area large at regular intervals to discuss problems with everyone who likes to see me.

With the cooperation of Editor I am taking this meaningful step to assure you that if it were possible I would like to call on one who would like to have me do so.

However, I would be glad to with any group or organization the evening if I could be notified the date well in advance.

Cooperatively yours,
B. A. SWEET,
County Supervisor, 5th D.

AMERICANA

By

Ellsworth Floyd Whalen

At Helsingfors, Finland, history is being made in stratospheric exploration. An apparatus weighing less than 18 pounds including sending equipment, is attached to a balloon approximately one yard in diameter and sent up into the stratosphere where reports are automatically telegraphed from the little machine which contains a aneroid barometer, and a very small radio sender. It is thus possible to gain knowledge of stratospheric conditions without the risk of human life.

Such experiments should be carried on in the United States, especially in the middle west where the huge dust storms devastated land and crops. It is possible that stratospheric conditions may have an important part in determining weather and climate conditions on the earth's surface. The United States Department of Agriculture might do well to watch the results gained by the Finnish Geophysical association this year at Spitzbergen when stratospheric temperature observations will be made with Dr. Vilho Vaisala's new-type stratosphere balloon and equipment.

In El Centro, California, a citizenship case was tried in court and proved to be most interesting. William Van Densellar, a resident of the United States 48 years and 67 years old, applied for his citizenship papers but was refused them by Superior Judge Vaughn Thompson when the Dutchman could not give any adequate reason for his living under the American flag so long without applying for his papers before reaching such an age. It seems as though the Dutchman was more interested in being eligible to receive an old age pension than he was in seeking the honor of being an American citizen. This case is probably only one of thousands which are of a similar nature, and the American judiciary must be careful with their citizenship grants to such foreign-born residents who put mercenary ideals before the sacred honor of citizenship and what it represents in the American spirit.

Automobile deaths have increased since the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment, many of the deaths resulting from drunk drivers. So far, little can be said for conditions existing among minors since prohibition's repeal, especially in California. Minors in California can go into a liquor store and buy hard drinks without being questioned as long as they look the "legal age." In the State of Washington, citizens must have a liquor license before they can purchase alcoholic beverages in any quantity, minors thus cannot obtain such licenses and their moral welfare is better guarded. It is to be hoped that the increasing deaths from drunk driving will eventually force public opinion to take a hand in formulating a safe and sane manner for the sale of intoxicating liquors in the State of California.

Something must be done about the drought section in Broadus, Montana. This part of the United States is suffering from swarms of Mormon crickets and grass hoppers in addition to heavy dust storms. With their water holes dried up and cattle starving, the citizens of Broadus, Montana are dumping their cattle on the market at any price they can obtain. Here is another problem for the New Deal to solve.

Perhaps some of my former readers remember my denunciation of the New Deal's AAA farm crop and cattle program when it was first launched on the public. At that time, writing under the title of AMERICANA, I pointed out the unsound tactics of destroying farm products willfully and suggested that if we did not create a dangerous shortage of food, God probably would for us by letting famine gradually sweep throughout the country. Since that time the nation has been visited with severe droughts and food shortages throughout the land in various sections have not been uncommon.

With certain forms of gambling now legalized by the Mexican government, it will not be very long before Americans will be rushing over the international boundary line to leave their hard-earned dollars in Mexico while trying their luck at games of "skill."

The State of California shows, in its exhibit at the San Diego Expo, the evolution of roads from the Apian Way to today.

Warren-Walker School

The Warren-Walker school summer session opened last week with a large enrollment. There are in addition to some of the students who attended the regular school session, many new pupils. Among the new students who are enjoying the many social, recreational, and academic advantages of the school are the following: Curtis and George Coleman, Griffith Davies, Franklin Baker, Jack Storey, Joyce Knox, Beatrice Mutty, Janene Oberhillman, Lois and Ned Titlow, Illamae Turner, Kenneth Harvey and Catherine Russell. Miss Russell is taking a special chemistry course in preparation for nurse's training.

Three new teachers have been added to the faculty staff. Miss Marion Bayless, who was music supervisor in the schools of Imperial for the past three years is in charge of the music this summer. Miss Barbara Bayless and Miss Ruth Walker are assisting in the primary grade. Mrs. Jack Stone, who was with the school last winter, is continuing her excellent teaching this summer.

Compacts Made in a Kaleidoscope of Colors

LONG before Columbus spied out the New World, the American Indians used a "rouge pat" when dressing for ceremonial dances and when the braves took to the war path. The make-up was made from vegetation, mostly by squeezing the juices from berries and fruits.

Modern cosmetics are the product of scientific laboratories and are far removed from the paints and rouges of the American Indian. Great as is the contrast between materials used for facial decorations by the redskins and the modern woman, there is an even greater difference in the case or container used in this coloring. Modern compacts, vanity cases and lipstick holders are works of art, furnished in many different designs.

Some are produced from precious metals—gold and silver, others with an enamel coating that permits the use of all the colors in the rainbow. Others are finished in brilliant chromium, polished nickel, satin brass and other metal tones.

When new, these toilette articles which are so necessary a part of my lady's boudoir or purse, are very much alike. They all have the appearance of having just been manufactured. But unless they are made from the precious metals—gold and silver—or have a base of a copper alloy they will soon become corroded and unsightly. This is particularly true where atmospheric conditions are severe, as for instance along the seacoasts, river valleys or in lake regions. For that reason many smart shoppers, when buying compacts, vanity cases or lipsticks, carry a little magnet with them. If the magnet and the article have an affinity for each other then the base metal is corrodible and in time will rust.

THE THEOSOPHICAL SOCIETY: POINT LOMA

The series of lectures on "What Death Really Is" constituting the June syllabus of subjects discussed at Theosophical headquarters, Point Loma, will be concluded on Sunday, June 27, when Dr. Joseph H. Fussell, secretary general of the Theosophical society, will give a summary of the main teachings concerning this important topic. He will link it up with the problems of human life and show the ethical and moral as well as intellectual and spiritual value of definite knowledge on this subject of death, something so greatly feared generally by men of the west, but to the true student of life holding no terrors at all. Knowledge and wisdom on this subject bring peace and contentment and a realization of the unending life that is ever ahead for the pilgrim-ego as he passes from 'house' to 'house' in 'my Father's mansion.' Dr. Fussell will also explain how the stars and all heavenly bodies are closely linked to us and how we mutually affect each other. The audience is cordially invited to share in the discussion following his remarks.

MAY BEVERAGE TAX IS $176,446.73

Seasonal increases in beer consumption have contributed to a total State tax on beer and wine amounting to $176,446.73 for the month of May, according to Ray Edgar, member of the state board of Equalization.

Explaining that the beverage tax is broadly divided into two classes, namely, beer and still wines taxed at two cents per gallon and champagne and sparkling wines taxed at three cents per pint, Edgar pointed out that all of the gain has come from the beverages taxed at the lower rate.

CHURCHES OF CHRIST, SCIENTIST

Jesus' words, "The kingdom of heaven is like unto leaven, which a woman took, and hid in three measures of meal, till the whole was leavened," are the Golden Text in the Lesson-Sermon on "Christian Science" on Sunday in all branches of The Mother Church, The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Mass.

The Lesson-Sermon includes these verses from John: "Then said Jesus to those Jews which believed on him, If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." It presents also the words of Jesus from Mark: "And these signs shall follow them that believe: In my name shall they cast out devils; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover."

Among the passages from "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy, are the following: "This healing power of Truth must have been far anterior to the period in which Jesus lived. It is as ancient as the Ancient of days. It lives through all Life, and extends throughout all space."

Telling Time at Night

Mrs. Green bought a sundial at a sale and had it erected in her garden. She called in the builder and instructed him to move it to a more suitable place. "Where would you like me to put it?" asked the builder. "Under the electric lamp in the porch," she replied. "Then we shall be able to see the time when it's dark."—Pearson's Weekly.

Give Him Time

The fisherman saw what looked to be a likely pool and turned to a man lounging on the bank. "Is it a crime to catch fish here?" he asked. "Crime?" was the retort. "If you catch any it'll be a miracle."—Vancouver Province.

Late King George Had an Excellent Set of Rules

Teach me to be obedient to the rules of the game.
Teach me to distinguish between sentiment and sentimentality, admiring the one and despising the other.
Teach me neither to proffer nor to receive cheap praise.
If I am called upon to suffer, let me be like a well-bred beast that goes away to suffer in silence.
Teach me to win, if I may; if I may not, teach me to be a good loser.
Teach me neither to cry for the moon nor to cry over spilled milk.—King George of England.

Blemishes Made Her Old Looking

Face Clear Again with Cuticura Soap and Ointment

Here is a letter every skin sufferer should read. Its message is vital. "There were blemishes on my face, of external origin, and they made me look old and haggard. They were red, hard and large. They would hurt, and when I scratched them the skin would become irritated, and I would lie awake at night and start, digging at my face.

"But after using two cakes of Cuticura Soap and one tin of Cuticura Ointment my face was cleared again." (Signed) Mrs. L. Whetzel, 2nd St., Florence, Pa., June 15, 1935.

Physicians can understand such letters. The Cuticura formulas have proved their effectiveness for over half a century. Remember, Cuticura Soap and Ointment are also for pimples, rashes, ringworm, burning of eczema and other externally caused skin blemishes. All druggists. Soap 25c. Ointment 25c.—Adv.

INDICATIVE of the rising tide of business recovery, the Western Electric company, a subsidiary of the American Telephone and Telegraph company, one of the largest employers of labor in the Middle West, resumed its common dividends. The action follows restoration of the company's operations to a profitable basis in 1935, with gains in both sales and employees. Practically the entire payment, amounting to $3,000,000, goes to American Telephone and Telegraph, which owns more than 90 per cent of Western Electric's stock.

At the company's Hawthorne works, near Chicago, 10,500 employees were on the payroll on June 1, an increase of 1,730 since January 1. This compares with a low of approximately 6,700 during 1933. Employment is now the highest since 1932.

A VITAL alteration in Great Britain's foreign policy, particularly as it affects Anglo-Italian relations, was indicated by Chancellor of the Exchequer Neville Chamberlain in an address in which he implied broadly that England may soon move to end sanctions against Italy. Regarded by many experts as likely to become Britain's next prime minister, Chamberlain said:

"Collective security based on sanctions has failed."

This was taken to mean that England may reverse the policy which had supported the League of Nations's futile sanctions campaign to halt Mussolini's conquest of Ethiopia.

In authoritative diplomatic circles in London it was reported that Mussolini had definitely served notice on Britain that Italy will leave the league unless the assembly meeting at Geneva on June 30 drops the anti-Italian sanctions program.

AGRICULTURE was given representation on the federal reserve board through the appointment by President Roosevelt of Chester C. Davis, administrator of the AAA to that body.

In discussing his appointment, Mr. Davis said: "The fiscal policy of the federal government has never been tied in closely enough with agricultural problems." Mr. Davis has spent most of his life in agricultural activities. He was born on a farm in Iowa, was graduated from Grinnell college and later owned and operated a farm. For some years he was a newspaper publisher and then became editor of the Montana Farmer.

Mr. Davis was succeeded as AAA administrator by Dr. Howard R. Tolley. Nationally known as a soil expert, Doctor Tolley helped Mr. Davis draft the soil conservation plan, enacted after the United States Supreme court decision invalidated the AAA.

THE New Deal was made the issue of a congressional campaign in Alabama with the result that Luther Patrick, an ardent supporter of the administration, defeated Congressman George Huddleston, an incumbent for 22 years. Patrick, a forty-two-year-old lawyer, won the Ninth district nomination by about 6,000 votes after a spirited campaign in which he charged Huddleston with disloyalty to the New Deal.

CALLLED back to the British cabinet, which he left some months ago as a political scapegoat, Sir Samuel Hoare was made first lord of the admiralty, to succeed Viscount Monsell. Sir Samuel, who boldly faced a hostile house of commons last December to defend his part in the Anglo-French peace plan which would have given Mussolini only a part of Ethiopia, will face the task of solving problems arising out of British-Italian fleet difficulties in the Mediterranean.

The biggest task facing Hoare, however, is restoration of the British navy to an undisputed position of supremacy on the seas.

TEXAS celebrated the one-hundredth anniversary of its independence by opening a $25,000,000 centennial exposition in Dallas. Foremost among distinguished visitors attending the world's fair the first week was President Roosevelt. To obtain the centennial exposition Dallas made available more than $9,000,000 in cash and property. The exposition will be open until November 29. Numerous other celebrations marking the state's 100 years of freedom have been held in various cities and towns of Texas. The exposition presents educational, historic and recreational features associated with a major world's fair.

THE senate passed the $829,000,000 compromise revenue measure by a vote of 38 to 24. The bill then went to conference with the house of representatives which had enacted a revenue measure carrying out tax proposals made by President Roosevelt. The senate measure called for a 15 1/2 to 15 per cent tax on net corporate incomes as compared with the present 12 1/2 to 15 per cent levy; a new type of 7 per cent tax on undistributed profits; repeal of the existing exemption of dividends from the 4 per cent normal income tax; an increase of 1 per cent in the individual income surtax on surtax brackets between $6,000 and $50,000.

News Review of Current Events the World Over

Landon Is Republican Nominee—Britain May Alter Sanctions Policy—Mussolini Makes Sweeping Changes in Cabinet.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.

IN ONE of the greatest demonstrations of popular acclaim in the history of American politics, Gov. Alfred M. Landon was nominated for President of the United States by the Republican national convention meeting in Cleveland.

Nominated on the first ballot, Governor Landon received the unprecedented number of 984 out of a possible 1,003 votes. The nomination was made unanimous. Although his name had not been placed in nomination, Senator William E. Borah of Idaho received 19 votes, including 18 from the Wisconsin delegation and one from West Virginia.

Col. Frank Knox of Chicago, publisher of the Chicago Daily News, was nominated for Vice President on the ticket, receiving the unanimous vote of the delegates.

Party unity and harmony were the watchwords of the delegates. The action of the three other leading candidates for the Presidential nomination—Col. Frank Knox of Chicago, Senator Arthur Vandenberg of Michigan and Senator Borah—In withdrawing in Landon's favor paved the way for a militant and united front in the coming campaign by the Republican party.

The convention adopted a platform of "Americanism," pledging a broad farm relief program, repeal of reciprocal tariff bargaining, the elimination of monopolies and opposition to American entry into the League of Nations and the World Court.

Condemning "waste and extravagance" of the Democratic administration, the platform declares for economy by reduced expenditures and for a balanced budget. Adequate relief for the unemployed and co-operation of the states is provided. The platform demands the repeal of the present social security program for a simplified "pay-as-you-go" old-age pension plan. Without proposing a constitutional amendment, it pledges support to states' minimum wage and working hour laws, abolition of sweatshops and child labor, improvement of working conditions and the right of labor to bargain. It calls for restoration and maintenance of the merit system in civil service, regulation of business by a tribunal whose actions would be subject to court review and federal supervision of interstate utilities.

The platform demands adequate national defense, right of free enterprise without competition by government, free speech, pledges care of the veterans and calls for efforts to collect the defaulted war debts.

Governor Landon in a telegram read to the convention by his campaign manager, John Hamilton, placed his own interpretation on certain planks in the platform. Under the title of labor he advocated a Constitutional amendment permitting the states to adopt legislation necessary to protect women and children in the matter of maximum hours, minimum wages and working conditions, provided it is not possible to do so under the Constitution as it now stands.

He likewise advocated a currency expressed in terms of gold and convertible into gold, adding: "I recognize, however, that this requisite must not be made until and unless it can be done without penalizing our domestic economy and without injury to our producers of agricultural products and other raw materials."

Concerning the merit system in civil service, he suggested that it should include every position in the administrative service below the rank of assistant secretaries of major departments and should cover the entire Post Office department.

IN A long expected cabinet shake-up in Italy, Premier Mussolini gave out three of his eight portfolios. There are 15 posts in the cabinet. Il Duce appointed his son-in-law, Count Galeazzo Ciano, as foreign minister. Ciano, only thirty-three, is the world's youngest foreign minister. He moved up from the cabinet post of propaganda. Mussolini also gave up the ministries of colonies and corporations, these posts going respectively to Ferruccio Lantini and Alessandro Lessona. Count Ciano's former ministry was taken by Dione Alfieri. Giuseppe Bastianini, ambassador to Poland, was made undersecretary for foreign affairs. He is only thirty-seven.

The action of Il Duce gave rise to talk of his successor. Observers pointed out that because of the importance of the post of foreign minister, Ciano is believed to be in closest succession to Mussolini.

Elsewhere in the world governments were experiencing changes. In Nicaragua, Dr. Carlos Brenes Jarquin, completing the unexpired term of the deposed President, Dr. Juan B. Sacasa, announced his cabinet. The cabinet included Dr. Luis Manuel Debayle, minister of foreign relations; Dr. Gerónimo Ramirez Brown, prime minister; Jose Roman Gonzales, minister of public works; Benito Ramiriz, minister of finance; Dr. Lorenzo Guerrero, minister of education; Dr. Roberto Gonzalez, minister of health; Dr. Alejandro Sequelra Rivas, sanitary director.

LARGER loaves of bread at no increase in price to the consumer were being offered by leading baking company chains selling their product in large cities of the United States. One company increased the size of its 10 cent loaf by 25 per cent, and another by 15 per cent. The saving to consumers was made possible by the invalidation of the AAA processing tax, according to an official of a baking company. The tax was 30 cents a bushel on wheat, he said, and was reflected in an increase of from $1.28 to $1.40 a barrel for flour.

At the same time, the threat of a possible potato famine, due to drought that is seriously curtailing crops in the Southeast, caused uneasiness among housewives. Prices rose precipitately, but eased off, because immediate demand from consumers declined. The seriousness of the situation was reflected in reports from the crop division of the Department of Agriculture that unless rains fell soon an acute shortage will boost the price of potatoes. The carry-over this year was small, it was revealed, and Maine reported only 100 carloads of last year's holdover on hand. While weather conditions up to the middle of July will determine the extent of the shortage, it was believed by farm experts that the later crops will meet the August and September demands.

DEATH came to John Hays Hammond, eighty-one, internationally famed mining engineer, economist and writer at his home at Gloucester, Mass. He had lived a life high in adventure and rich in experiences. He was a friend and confidant of Theodore Roosevelt, Mark Twain, H. Rider Haggard, Cecil Rhodes and many other figures celebrated in world history in the past half century.

Mr. Hammond was born in San Francisco, California, in 1855 where his parents settled after the Mexican war in which his father served as a major. It was the era of the spectacular California gold rush. He watched miners pan for gold dust as a boy. After graduation from Yale he set himself up as a mining engineer. Soon he visited the west coast of Mexico, believing it could be developed as a mining country.

He became known as an expert judge of mining property and was sent to South Africa by "Barney" Barnato, great speculator of the last century. Hammond experienced some romantic adventures including an acrimonious encounter with Paul Kruger, president of the Transvaal republic who sentenced him to be hanged and released only on the intervention of the secretary of state.

After developing mining property in many parts of the world, Mr. Hammond was appointed by President Taft in 1911 as special ambassador and personal representative at the coronation of King George V.

AFTER settling a general strike in which 1,000,000 workers had paralyzed the industrial life of France, the new "popular front" government under Premier Leon Blum was faced with further difficulties in the form of a series of new strikes. Although the government had toiled day and night trying to adjust disputes and though most of the demands of strikers had been satisfied by employers, there was a smaller return to work than had been expected. It was reported that as fast as strikes in some industries were settled, others were affected.

The extent of the permanent ravages which will be left in the wake of this upheaval will only become apparent later on. Some observers predicted that private industry would be forced into bankruptcy so as to secure operation by the state. But whether Premier Blum and his "popular front" government were prepared for such extreme measures was not at all certain.

THE Supreme Court of Illinois upheld the constitutionality of the state's fair trade act in a decision affirming the opinion of the Cook County Circuit court. The court held that Carl W. McNeil, in the liquor business in Chicago, could not sell his product at less than the wholesale list price. Said the opinion:

"The fair trade act has for its major objective the preservation and protection of property interests of the producer and his distributors in the good will represented by brands, trade marks and trade names."

Mushrooms added to brown gravy served with a roast give it a delicious flavor.

Coral heads may be cleaned by dissolving a teaspoonful of borax in a pint of warm water. Dip the coral, and when clean, put through tepid water.

Try this method of watering hybrid tea roses all during the summer. With a can opener remove both ends from a tin can, then sink can, one open end down, into the ground. Turn hose into cans and occasionally liquid manure.

A strong solution of borax and water boiled in the coffee pot occasionally will keep it sweet.

When mulching perennials avoid using too heavy a mulch. The purpose of the mulch is to keep the plants cool, not warm.
